Padre gridders open in Salinas; rely on quickness

By JAY POSNER

HOPING TO CAPITALIZE on overall team speed, the Carmel High School Padres open their varsity grid schedule Friday night against the Cowboys of Salinas High School.

The non-conference game starts at 8 p.m. at the Salinas field, 726 S. Main St. The frosh-soph skirmish is scheduled for 5:30 p.m.

Athletic League competition this season as an economy move after passage of Proposition 13.

Coach Frank Lynch said that the team's strong points should be speed and the fact that the key positions of quarterback, running back, wide receiver are filled with excellent players. Quarterback John Lucido, who has been switched from wide receiver, will lead the Padre offense in the "I" formation. The starting running backs probably will be David Oliver, Mike Odello and Mark Notenkamper, with Dave Araujo, Tim Sherman and Paul St. Germain filling in as replacements. When Lucido goes to the air, he will be throwing to either tightend Bruce Robinson or wide receivers John Hollister and Steve Selle.

The Padre defense, a 4-3 "Pro," will be anchored by senior defensive ends Tom Larson and Mike Harney, and by Paul St. Germain, a senior middle linebacker.

To test the team's readiness, the squad was divided into the "Reds" and the "Whites" on Saturday. The scrimmage lasted about an hour. The red shirts won, 51-6.

Lynch said the major weak spot is the depth of the club, which has been hampered by family moves and injuries to four players. Those players are Tom Vanatta, who moved to New Mexico; Dane

King City will be the team to beat in the MTAL because it has a large number of returning players, Lynch said. Pacific Grove and Palma also should be tough, according to Lynch. Palma has 129 players out for the team. It has an enrollment of about 450.

Argument about Rippling River's future

Civil rights law may thwart 'dream' care facility

By KEN PETERSON

THE BATTLE OF Rippling River may be over, but it may have only been the first shot in a wider war.

The financially-floundering residential complex for the handicapped and those with low incomes in Carmel Valley probably will be sold to the Monterey County Housing Authority and converted into federally-subsidized low-income housing. It then will be available to elderly and handicapped individuals. They will be charged 25 per cent of their income for the rent.

The 10 handicapped people living there now will remain at the center. There are a total of 31 tenants. Bruce Moore, executive director of the housing authority, already has assured the handicapped they can stay.

But the larger issue left unresolved is a philosophical one regarding treatment of the handicapped. The residents at Rippling River would like the center maintained as it was originally envisioned: a semi-independent living center for the handicapped only.

Federal policy, backed up by civil rights law, is to integrate the handicapped into society rather than isolate them. So, federal dollars aren't available to make the dream for Rippling River come true.

REPRESENTATIVE Leon E. Panetta, D-Monterey, for one, thinks this may be the wrong approach.

Panetta lives just down the road from Rippling River and has been involved with the fate of the center's residents during much of their battle to keep the facility open.

Panetta met personally with representatives of the housing authority, the U.S. departments of Housing and Urban Development, and Health Education and Welfare, plus center residents, state rehabilitation officials and Rippling River management in January.

At that time, they discussed all possible alternatives for the center and settled on a sale to the housing authority as the best approach.

While maintaining the center exclusively for the handicapped—as it was originally planned—is theoretically possible, there would be no federal money forthcoming to do it.

Why? According to Panetta, it's because current federal policies "are not to segregate, isolate the handicapped, but to provide smaller facilities for them in the community, with access to jobs, shopping, services."

"Isolating them in Carmel Valley is not what the current policies would concur in," he said.

Panetta questions the commitment to "mainstreaming" as the only approach to housing the handicapped.

"You shouldn't have such a tight policy that doesn't provide for exceptions," he said.

"The point I think is always overlooked by the bureaucrats is the element of providing free choice, open

Four Valley residents killed in plane crash

JOINT MEMORIAL services were conducted Wednesday for four Carmel Valley residents killed Friday when their light plane crashed in Anderson Canyon south of Big Sur.

Killed in the crash were Wendy Janet Eagling, 23; her brother, David, 25; and Jon Christopher Aebersold, 20. Teri Elizabeth Rushmer, 18, survived the crash, but died en route to the St. Francis Hospital Burn Center in San Francisco.

The cause of the crash is under investigation by the National Transportation Safety Board. A report from the board is expected within a month, according to an investigator in Oakland.

Miss Rushmer, found alive by rescuers when they reached the scene several hours after the crash, reportedly said the plane stalled as it was climbing out of the rugged canyon.

Miss Eagling, a licensed pilot and student at the Florida Institute of Aviation Technology, rented the Beechcraft C24R earlier in the day from Cypress Aviation Inc. in Salinas. She flew to the Carmel Valley airstrip to pick up the others before heading south down the coast.

The 6:30 p.m. crash triggered a 10-acre brushfire. Five engine companies and about 80 firefighters controlled the blaze Saturday morning, according to the U.S. Forest Service. Because the crash was in a rugged and remote area, it was several hours after the fire was discovered before firefighters learned that a plane had crashed.

Wendy and David Eagling lived with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Eagling, of 27430 Loma del Rey. Both were born in Montreal, Quebec.

Both were graduates of Carmel High School. David worked as a carpenter and Wendy had planned to go back to school in Melbourne, Fla., two days after the crash.

Survivors include their parents and brothers Wayne J. Eagling, principal dancer with the Royal Ballet Company in London, and Brent Gordon Eagling of Carmel Valley.

Miss Rushmer lived at 95 Boronda Rd. with her family. She was born in Kansas City, Kan. She graduated from Carmel High School.

She is survived by her mother, Nancy Rushmer, sister Tracy Ann, and maternal grandparents Mr. and Mrs. Ernest A. Etherton, all of Carmel Valley.

Aebersold was a Carmel native. He lived at 32 Country Club Dr. He was self-employed as a licensed general contractor.

His family owns the Surf and Sand Drug Store in Carmel.

Survivors include his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Allan Aebersold of Honolulu; a sister, Sandra Wise of Carmel Valley; and paternal grandmother, Mrs. George A. Aebersold of Michigan.

The joint memorial service was at St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church. Bodies of all four victims were to be cremated.

Funeral arrangements for Miss Rushmer were under the direction of the Paul Mortuary. Farlinger Funeral Home handled arrangements for the other three.

35 members attend

Kiwanians hold installation dinner

The Carmel Valley Kiwanis installation dinner Saturday at Rancho Canada was attended by 35 members and their wives. In addition, special guests enjoying the festivities were District 43 Lt. Gov. Norman Berdan and his wife, Lois, from Salinas; and Lt. Gov.-designate Fred Fozounmayeh and his wife, Cecilia, from Carmel.

Outgoing president Randy Randazzo acknowledged participation of members' wives by presenting each of them with a certificate bearing the official Kiwanis seal. Accompanying each of the certificates was a long-stemmed red rose. The president's wife, Ann, received special recognition for her support of the program which resulted in the collection of 50 sweaters for the needy.

Other awards presented to the membership included a plaque given as a special award to Webb Buckham and inscribed, "Service Beyond the Call of Duty."

Past Lt. Gov. Otto Huebner installed the following new board members and directors: President Bill Reardon; Immediate past president Randy Randazzo; First vice president Dick Hindman; Second vice president Larry Gardner; secretary Fred Fisher; and treasurer Harold Fly.

Directors include Orville Rogers, John Von Berg, Jack Clark, Jerry Kurz, Dick Scanlon, Joe Chapliss, Terry Kirby, Lt. Gov.-elect Erasimo Belleci, Huebner and Buckham.

A hand-carved gavel—crafted by member Bob Klingel from the limb of a 250-year-old Carmel Valley oak tree (by ring count)—was presented to his successor by Randazzo.

Show-stopping entertainment was presented by Claire and Bill Reardon and Shirley and Otto Huebner. The costumed couples danced an authentic Tarantella, a dance still performed in Sicily on festive occasions.

Needlework at St. Dunstan's

Meeting last week were members of the St. Dunstan's Needlework Guild. The guild will present "Quilts, Tea and Crumpets" on Friday, Sept. 29 from 1 to 5 p.m. in the St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church parlor on Robinson Canyon Road.

Gloria Stewart and Betsy Shea, who are co-chairing the benefit, have arranged for both new and old quilts belonging to members of the church to be shown. There will be pieced quilts, crib quilts and crazy quilts displayed with antiques and harvest arrangements. In addition, quilting will be demonstrated.

Quilters and appliquers will be interested in a booth "Bits and Pieces" featuring an assortment of small and large pieces of fabric which may be purchased.

Donations are $2.50 for show admission.

Minicycle racer is 'No. 1'

Danny Moore, who raced locally, just returned from the east with two three-foot-high trophies, the national championship, in his minicycle age group, and the right to race under the national plate, "No. 1."

The 14-year-old Carmel High School freshman has been racing minicycles for a year and a half. He belongs to AMA Northern California District 36 and holds the No. 2 position in the district in the mini-expert class.

To qualify for the nationals, Danny competed in races in Clackamas, Ore., with entries from five states. The Oregon competition was one of six eliminators in the states. Danny, along with five other first-place finishers, went to New York with a total of 36 riders in each class.

The third annual National Mini-cycle Amateur T.T. (skills track) Championships took place in the rolling hills of Binghamton, N.Y. Accompanied by his parents, Ann and Dan Moore, and sisters, Brenda and Shannon, the young entrant went across country with other California families. The Valleyites were enthusiastic about the well run finals, the clean-cut riders and the gracious hospitality extended to them during their 10-day stay.

Danny, riding his Yamaha, won both heats and the main event—85 and 100 cc in the 12- to 15-year-old class. The national champion has more than 90 trophies and is sponsored by Cal's Cycle Supply of Seaside. His home track for both practice and race is the Salinas Airport. He has a race coming up there Sunday and, for the first time, his cheering section will have his great-grandmother, Mrs. Russell Giles, 83, of Pacific Grove, in it.

It also will be different competition for Danny, who has graduated to 125 and 250 bikes—a real feat since he only weighs 78 pounds.

The sport has become total family involvement with his dad helping maintain the bikes and the rest of the family on hand each weekend to cheer him on.

Also competing from the Valley is Jeff Nichols, a sophomore at Carmel High School. The 15-year-old has just qualified for the Expert Class.

Two other local boys who have just turned professional racers are Ryan Seidel, 19, and Kevin Huggill, 18.

Membership luncheon for Garden Club

The Carmel Valley Garden Club is planning a membership luncheon Saturday, Sept. 23 at the Rancho Road home of Mary and John Jernegan. Anyone interested in gardening is invited to attend and join members in the busy, informative monthly course plotted by club president Reeford Shea and his board of directors. Already the date for the 1979 flower show has been set for the Mother's Day weekend in May.

Membership chairman Bob Brandt extends an invitation to new residents who may make reservations or obtain more information by phoning Betsy Shea at 659-4968.

Parade for Halloween

Halloween may be a month away, but Marian Englund, program chairman for the Carmel Valley Community Youth Center Board of Directors, wants everyone to know that the traditional Halloween Parade and Carnival will be on Halloween night at the center.

AN ANONYMOUS PROTESTOR posted the sign at left on Carmel Valley Road, indicating the grading operations at right for the Carmel Valley Ranch golf course. The ranch developers seek approval for eight additional tennis courts today at 4:15 p.m. from the Monterey County Zoning Administrator in Salinas and will submit a tentative map for 160 townhouses and single-family homes later this year. Scaled down

Planners approve Mercurio project

The Monterey County Planning Commission approved a scaled-down 17-unit subdivision in Carmel Valley on Wednesday.

But the commission slapped a requirement on the planned Mercurio subdivision that would reduce the number of lots further if the soil is unable to properly absorb seepage from septic tanks.

The project was referred back to the commission by the board of supervisors in August after the planners rejected a 21-lot proposal in May. Mercurio trimmed four lots before bringing his appeal to the supervisors. At the time of the supervisors' hearing, the board indicated it intended to approve some development on the property just west of the Tierra Grande subdivision, north of Carmel Valley Road.

The commission accepted the 17-lot plan with 22 conditions. New requirements imposed Wednesday are that a soil analysis of the land be made to determine where effluent from septic tanks will seep. It relates to one condition that any lot that cannot support a septic tank must be eliminated. The land would either be converted to scenic easement or combined with another lot in the development. The total project involves almost 30 acres.

Youth Center nets $1,400

The Carmel Valley Community Youth Center netted nearly $1,400 from the Hot Summer Night benefit dance concert, according to Peter Coakley of the board of directors.

Coakley said the dance at Hidden Valley Music Seminars drew 600 to 700 youths from the Monterey Peninsula.

"I want to thank the community at large, Hidden Valley and the bands for their support of the youth center," he said.

Money from the benefit will go for programs at the youth center, located at Ford and Carmel Valley roads.

Valley woman injured; swerves to avoid horse

A 59-year-old Carmel Valley woman was listed in stable condition Wednesday at Community Hospital after she was injured Monday when she swerved her car off Carmel Valley Road to avoid hitting a horse.

It was the third horse-car incident on the road this summer.

Alice V. Degroat, of 6 Paso Cresta, was involved in the accident at 11:55 p.m. just east of Valley Greens Drive.

According to the California Highway Patrol, she was eastbound when she spotted the horse on the road, swerved to avoid it and drove into the dirt bank on the side of the road.

The horse was not injured and ran off after the crash.

In the two other incidents, horses were killed when struck by cars. Leanne Eberle, the passenger in one car, was seriously injured in the crash and remains in the intensive care unit at Community Hospital.

Center should be for the disabled, residents say opportunities for the handicapped for the type of lifestyle they want to have," said Panetta.

WHILE SOME MIGHT want to have neighbors with no disabilities, there are others who prefer living in a complex where most of the residents are handicapped.

His comments were echoed by Leslie Holloway, one of the Rippling River residents and a leader in the effort to keep the center exclusively for the handicapped.

"They want to put us in with the rest of the world, but the rest of the world isn't ready for us," she said.

Miss Holloway pointed out that there are many architectural barriers to be removed before the handicapped can travel about freely in cities. At Rippling River and in Carmel Valley Village, on the other hand, their movement is relatively unimpaired.

The center offers them a chance to live in individual apartments, travel country roads, use a swimming pool, she said. They have limited transportation to and from the center in a specially-designed van. Before recent budget cutbacks, the county also provided another van through the Community Service Department to take them to medical and other appointments.

What the center offers to simplify the "independent" living is communal meals in the Rippling River dining room. The housing authority wants to maintain that set-up after it takes over, but the basic plan for the center is to convert the 150 units there into some 30 individual apartments with kitchens.

Moore was unsure how long a communal meal set-up would be financially feasible. After all, he pointed out, you need to serve a minimum number of meals in order to make the system work.

dependence at Rippling River, she doesn't believe she could get by without assistance in a "mainstream" situation. And if the communal dining room eventually is phased out, she said the handicapped effectively will be phased out as well.

"How are you going to get to a store in a wheelchair?" she asked. "And if you get there, how are you going to bring home groceries?"

Opponents of group homes like Rippling River "try to make it sound bad by saying they don't want a ghetto for the handicapped."

"Well, we want a ghetto."

"That's what they tell us," said Anna Hunt, a resident at the center. "Why don't they ask us what we want?"

Mrs. Hunt said the idea of putting the handicapped back in houses throughout the community is "the most stupid thing I ever heard. That's what we came out of."

"I feel like I had 13 years in prison. I was given a reprieve coming here. I've been here three years now and they've been beautiful."

She smiles a cherubic, grandmotherly smile, sitting in the common room of her apartment surrounded by still-life paintings of flowers she made in Rippling River's crafts center.

"It's a terrible feeling to have to be lifted if you want to get out of the house or into a car," she said. "Nobody has to help me here."

CURT SHERWOOD, a rehabilitation counselor with the state Department of Rehabilitation in Monterey, said Rippling River is "a fine concept in the wrong place."

The fact that it is 17 miles from the Peninsula and "depends on one broken down old van" as transportation has made it hard to offer educational and vocational programs for the handicapped there, he said.

Sherwood said he can see the need for a center like Rippling River, although he personally favors integrating the handicapped into society to a greater degree.

Sherwood said he can see the attraction of a housing complex in Carmel Valley, noting that many of his able-bodied acquaintances have chosen lower-paying jobs outside their specialty just to live on the Monterey Peninsula.

"There's a price for paradise," he said. In the case of the handicapped, it means less mobility, something HEW is not willing to underwrite with federal money.

Jim Miller, a quadriplegic and president of the Sacramento chapter of the California Association of the Physically Handicapped, said it is "a matter of opinion" whether integration or a group home is better.

"Personally, I feel if there is any way in the world to 'mainstream' a person, that is the way to go," Miller said. The Center for Independent Living in Berkeley and similar operations like it statewide are dedicated to that premise.

And, according to executive director Phil Draper, there are a lot of tools available to the handicapped to help them make it.

State and federal money will pay to alter someone's home so they can maneuver about in a wheelchair or to help them find a suitable house if modifications are impossible.

There is money to pay for attendants help with bathing, dressing and meals for those who need it.

The Center for Independent Living counsels the handicapped to help them find these sources of money, Draper said. It also has a wheelchair repair service, attendant hiring service and can give hints on how to adapt a house and its furnishings to a disabled person.

"It's just a matter of an individual being fortunate enough to hear about it," Draper said. The Center for Independent Living takes that advocate role, since state and county social service organizations don't always reach out to tell the handicapped what is available.

"Did you know it's cheaper to maintain someone in their own home with an attendant than it is in a nursing home?" he asked. "If you get an active, happy person living in the community, they take better care of their health."

Draper said there is a need for "minimal transitional living"—but only to get the disabled ready to strike out on their own.

Living in a protected environment, he added, is "not really living independently."

"Most people are capable of a lot more than they think," Draper said.

MISS HOLLOWAY cites figures from the California Association of the Physically Handicapped that put the U.S. handicapped population at 22 to 38 million. There are 1.8 million handicapped living in California alone, she said.

She believes enough of them need Rippling River to fill the center up—if they were aware the center existed and federal funds were available to underwrite the costs.

LORENA BALSLEY sits in the common room of her apartment at Rippling River in Carmel Valley. If the center were fully occupied, she would share this room with three other tenants. All four of them would have separate bedrooms and bathrooms off the common room. (Michael Stang photo)

THE HANDICAPPED at Rippling River are used to other social services, a "higher degree of care than the housing authority is used to providing," Moore said.

But, he added, by cooperating with other county agencies, those services will continue should the authority buy the center from the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The handicapped do not have the same disabilities. Some are elderly people suffering the infirmities of age. Others are young adults struck overnight by multiple sclerosis and now confined to wheelchairs. Some are accident victims. Others have difficulty speaking and communicating, in addition to other handicaps.

"Some people here never lived anywhere but with mother and daddy," said Miss Holloway. "I've really watched them blossom."

RIPPLING RIVER offers a compromised independence between total self-sufficiency and total dependence on family or paid nurses. Federal legal and fiscal emphasis is on making the handicapped independent of group homes or the need for special facilities.

Jonathan Bothello is a civil rights attorney with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare office in San Francisco. He specializes in cases involving the disabled.

The core issue "is the same as in the first civil rights decisions of the 1950s." Separate facilities—whether for blacks, Mexican-Americans or the handicapped—are inherently unequal.

While centers like Rippling River "in some cases would be appropriate," Bothello said the handicapped have the legal right to expect and demand equal facilities.

For a while, we're in a transition period," he admitted. "In a sense, we're promising more than we can deliver."

"But in a few more years, the handicapped won't face architectural barriers. They will be able to get on public transportation and navigate in town as well as someone without disabilities."

"Thousands of people in Berkeley do it every day," Bothello said. "The Berkeley ideal is a kind of goal for the whole nation."

He suggested that residents at Rippling River get in touch with groups like the Center for Independent Living in Berkeley. It offers assistance and training to help the handicapped make it on their own.

IN THE INTERIM, there are other centers like Rippling River which can meet the needs of those handicapped persons who need that type of facility, he said.

But, Bothello added, there is "no question the emphasis is on greater independence."

"We're just common, ordinary folks," added Miss Holloway. "We just get around different, that's all."
